

TROUBLED Suzanne Shaw has jungle babe Myleene Klass to thank for saving her life.

The gorgeous girl admits she felt like ending it all after hitting rockbottom.

But, thanks to her "rock" and best pal Myleene, 28, she's got her life – and career – back on track.

Now she's looking forward to pulling on her stockings and suspenders in a new West End production of smash musical The Rocky Horror Show.

Yet, just a few months ago, Suzanne admits she was hit by a wave of depression. And it was only thanks to I'm A Celebrity star Myleene that she managed to overcome it.

Struggle

Struggle

Suzanne, 25, was devastated after being dumped by infamous love-rat Darren Day, 38. As she struggled to cope as a single mum with the baby blues, the former Hear'Say babe found herself caught in a spiral of misery.

Her confidence was shattered, her career sinking and her money running out. Yet one person was always there for her – her old Popstars pal Myleene.

Bury-born Suzanne admits: "Sometimes it was a real struggle to keep going. I was battling a deep depression. "It was only Myleene's support that helped me pull through. She's helped me through the dark times and has been as solid as a rock.

"She's Godmother to my two-year-old son, Corey, and like my sister. Myleene has helped me get through the dark times over the past two years.

"A few months ago, I was feeling really down on my birthday. When she called me to say 'Happy birthday', she realised I was unhappy."

The following evening, after Suzanne

SUPPORT: Best pal Myleene had been appearing on stage in Stokeon-Trent, Staffs, Myleene turned up.

"I walked off stage and she was sait in my dressing room," she says. "She'd driven all the way from London and was just there for me.
"That night, she had to drive all the way back to London to get up early and do a TV show. That's what an incredible friend she is.
"On her days off, she helps out with Corey – and so does her partner, Graham. Without these people around me would I have been able to carry on?
"From the minute I was pregnant, Myleene was by my side. She's very strong, very good at saying, 'Pull yourself together, everything's going to be fine'. She's got a nice combination of tough love and sympathy."

Suzanne also reveals that Myleene, who came second to Matt Willis, 23, in I'm A Celeb last week, phoned her just before joining the show in Australia.

"She told me how nervous she was and asked me whether she was doing the right thing. I said: 'Or course you are you're such a lovely person, you could never come across in a bad way."

"She wanted to get over a lot of fears, conquer new things, so she did it for the right reasons.

"It's been massively character building for her. Up until now, even the tiniest spider gave her sleepless nights. I'm so proud of her."

Once Myleene arrives home, Suzanne has promised to give her a big hug—then hit the shops with her.

She says: "We've planned a full-on shopping day together, which is always our favourite fun.

"We have similar styles. On our girlie days, we meet in Covent Garden, shopfirst and then eat at Pizza Express."

Suzanne is now looking forward to appearing on stage in The Rocky Horror Show later this month.

And she's also hoping to put her fling with Darren behind her. After spending 18 stormy months together, he dumped her while she was pregnant.

But she dismisses his claims that he left because she was violent towards him. She insists: "It's just laughable. I have no violence in me whatsoever.

"Nobody would believe what went on behind those four walls when Darren and I were together, it was that outrageous.
"I can throw thousands of true allega-and I were together, it was that outrageous.

"I can throw thousands of true allegations straight back at him that people would go cold over. He doesn't upset me any longer. I'm just so frustrated with the crap that comes out of his mouth.

"I've had no financial support from him. I'm the only one supporting my son financially. It took its toll on me."

But with Myleene on her side, Suzanne is sure to win through.

Suzanne stars in The Rocky Horror Show at London's Comedy Theatre from December 21 to January 27.

This particular crim-nabbing show goes under the title MANHUNT (ITV1, 9pm) and is co-hosted by Mark Austin and Sarah Heaney. Mark and Sarah would very much appreciate our assistance, as would the Crimestoppers bunch, in tracking down 10 of the country's most wanted individuals, whose offences – or alleged offences, I presume we have to refer to them as – range from fraud to murder.

As well as obviously outlining what these people are said to have done, there'll be detailed reconstructions, CCTV footage, interviews etc. to help jog memories. Plus, of course, the promise that any information you do provide will be treated in the strictest confidence and won't result in you receiving a visit at 2am from a pair of grunting knuckle-draggers wielding nail-studded baseball bats.

MEANWHILE, over on BBC2 in the same time slot, there's a bloke trying to turn a bunch of schoolkids into a top-notch choir in, erm, THE CHOIR. The London Symphony Orchestra's Gareth

Malone has given himself nine months, don't ask me why, to transform these pupils, from Northolt High School in Middlesex – none of whom has a clue about classical music – into a singing unit good enough to compete in the World Choir Games in China. As you could probably have guessed, he soon finds he's got his work cut out.

Finally, our own Vanessa Feltz returns to our screens at lunchtime with her new daily show VANESSA'S REAL LIVES (ITV1, 12.30pm), filling us in on the lives of ordinary people with, as they say, extraordinary tales to tell.

TURNER was inspired by its sunsets. T.S. Eliot penned poetry there. Margate may seem an unlikely inspiration for art but it's recently been the site of a venture by Angel recently been the site of a venture by Angel Of The North sculptor Anthony Gormley. WASTE MAN (Saturday, C4) followed Gormley's efforts to construct a gigantic man out of household refuse – using the local community to provide materials and labour. Once built, it was to be burned down as the centrepiece of Exodus, a major film due to be released next year. Tapping into the themes of displaced persons and tribes shifting across the globe, Gormley was keen to involve the town's sizeable population of recent immigrants. But that didn't always go to plan. Gormley put on the odd, Franco-Turkish accent that we British use when speaking to foreigners – tell a group of young men that his sculpture was, "med from... aah... rabbeesh" and invite them down to have a look. Once in front of the towering monument, they were told that it symbolised them. "We're going to be burned?" they asked, warily.

Humour

The sculptor then tried to explain that fire was often, mistakenly, seen as a kind of punishment. "Punishment for the people who made this statue?" asked an African girl, almost hopefully. With admirable good humour, Gormley admitted he couldn't guarantee people would get the point, but he thought it was worth a go. Even so, the native population of Margate held similar views to the new arrivals. One man approved, if not for the right reason. "Stick a few yobbos in it, and I'll be there," he said. Å fellow Margater seemed more delighted at the prospect of watching her old sofa going up in flames, than taking part in a community art-happening.

But this was the film's point. It didn't try to pretend that everyone in town turned into an art-lover, nor that the sculpture was greeted with total hostility. Foreign and home-grown alike were amused, bemused, indifferent – they reacted like people.

And good art should always be about people. Because when it's not, it's rubbish.

A BEAUTIFUL woman went to see a seedy gynaecologist. He took one look at her and all his professionalism flew out the window. As he stroked her thigh he asked: "Do you know what I am doing?" She replied: "You are checking for abrasions or abnormalities." "That's right," said the doctor. He then began to fondle her breasts. "Do you know what I am doing now?" he asked. "Yes," she said. "You are checking for lumps which might indicate breast cancer." "Correct," replied the doctor. Finally, he started having sex with her. He asked: "Do you know what I am doing now?" "Yes," she said. sneaky hubby

DURING a heated family row, my father-in-law called me a "self-centred, money-grabbing cow".

He accused me of working his son (my husband) into an early grave.

I promptly threw him out and vowed never to speak to any of that side of the family again.

But I'm aware that my husband keeps sneaking round to see his parents behind my back. Three times now I've seen his car parked there.

I'm furious. Where's the loyalty in that?

My husband is supposed to be on my side, but he's betraying me and I bet they're talking about me too. Now he's saying that he wants us all to make up for Christmas. Over my dead body.

JANE SAYS: There's no getting away from the fact that your husband still loves, and is loyal to, his parents. You're never going to change that – and why would you want to? Okay, you and your father-in-law had a hust-lin and come father-in-law had a bust-up and some unfortunate things were said. But you can't expect your husband to cut his parents out of his life over it. You should all get together and say "sorry". You need to iron out your differences and move on. You'll all have to

You'll all have to accept that there was probably fault on both sides. ides. As for Christmas

As for Christmas, surely you could man-age a drink together on Christmas morning even if you can't face the whole lunch?

But I want him

just to myself

MY best mate and I are both sleeping with the same bloke.

He says he fancies us both equally and cannot choose between us.

Ilove him so much and just wish he'd pick me. We'd be real soulmates if it was just us and she was off the scene.

med pick me. Wed be real sounmates if it was just us and she was off the scene.
My "mate" is nothing but a tart.
She's already slept with seven other blokes this year alone.
I know she's not as serious about my fella as I am. She's only hanging on to wind me up.
She can't stand the thought of me having a boyfriend and her not being involved.
The problem I have is that she's so much prettier than me.
With her long dark hair and curvy figure, she's fancied by most of the blokes we know and has a reputation for being a bad girl in bed.

Shadow

I'm okay but I'm nothing special. I've struggled to get boyfriends in the past because I've always been in her shadow. Now I've found someone I like, I'm desperate to have him all to myself.

It breaks my heart when I realise he's stayed the night at her place. It cuts me in two when she describes how he's made love to her and how great he's made her feel.

Yet he always comes round to see me on a Friday night and tells me how much he's missed me.

I have tried to talk to him a couple of times about how things stand but he's asked me not to put pressure on him. He says his ex-girlfriend tried to control him and it drove him mad Instead bo girlfriend tried to control him and it drove him mad. Instead he wants me to "chill out" and give him time to get his head together. But I've no idea how long he expects me to wait.

expects me to wait. How long would you wait for the man you love?

JANE SAYS: I'd like to say five minutes. But I'm not you and I'm not in your position. Thankfully I'm not madly in love with this jerk and don't have to put up with his nonsense. I don't have to go through the heartache of imagining my boyfriend with my best friend – and slowly dying inside every time she gushes about how great he is.

he is.
I understand you are infatuated with this fickle man. But please force yourself to look at the facts. He's a cheat.

He's a cheat.

He's a user and he's a liar. He's playing you both off against each other.

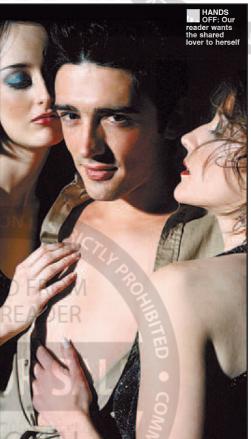

He's having his cake, covering it with whipped cream and stuffing it in his greedy mouth.

Surely you deserve better than this? Surely you deserve better than who is decent and honest?

Surely being single is preferable to this humiliation?

What if this auv cets you and able to this humiliation?

What if this guy gets you and your mate pregnant at the same time and ultimately leaves you in the lurch? How would you cope?
Do yourself a favour and dump the pair of them. You don't need either of them in your life. Inevitably, your mate will grow bored of him and then he'll be alone. Maybe then he'll be alone. Maybe then he'll be able to reflect about what he lost in you.

over a 'bum' joke

I CAN'T face sex with my wife after a good-looking bisexual guy in our office told me I had a nice bum.

I was really flattered and intrigued. I can't stop thinking about him and I've become slightly fixated.

I know it was a flirtatious joke on his part, because he's currently in a relationship with a woman and certainly wouldn't be interested in me.

But his words have stirred up something deep inside me.

Power

I'd always assumed that I'm 100% straight – but maybe I'm not. Maybe there's more to me than meets the eye. I just feel unsettled and confused. I'm confident I'm not gay. But what if I'm a little bit bisexual?

JANE SAYS: Some-

JANE SAYS: Some-times an unexpected comment can have the power to knock us sideways. In your case, a compliment – from an attractive man – has made you question your true sexuality. It has shaken and It has shaken and unnerved you. But I really do think this is a temporary blip. If you've never fancied men before and have always been perfectly satisfied with your sex life at home, then this is just one of those things.

those things.
An attractive man is an attractive man — and you don't have to be a woman to appreciate that.

Scared to trust two-timing rat

LAST Christmas my boyfriend nipped out for a packet of fags at 10am and came back on January 5.
The turkey was left to burn as I drowned my sorrows in Babycham.

Eventually I discovered that he was with his "other woman" two miles down the road.

This year he swears that things will be different.
Apparently she's off the scene and he's all mine.
But can I trust him?

JANE SAYS: I suggest that you organise the Christmas you want, complete with your family and friends. If your boyfriend is there, then he's there. If he's not, then you simply need to carry on without him and enjoy yourself anyway. The bottom line is that you can't spend your life waiting around for him.

around for him.

If he's unreliable and untrustworthy, then there's not much hope. And if he does let you down again, you've got to get rid of him promptly in the New Year.
